Target Gets Creative With NYC 'Bodegas'

By Sharon Edelson

Laforce and Stevens, the firm that handles PR for Target fashion and beauty, helped to ensure that fashion messaging remained consistent. The firm also managed celebrity ties to the event, Thomas said. He added that Target embraced the blogosphere for the initiative as part of its goal to reach a diverse demographic across the categories and position the Target brand as "new and fresh." ## Delicious Deli

It hopped on the heels of Fashion Week with a Manhattan to give an early look at some of its delectable offerings. This weekend, Manhattan will be home to not one, but five pop-ups. The first, a Target Bullseye Bodega, opened to the public this morning, first hosted a crowd of fashionistas, including the likes of Gwyneth Paltrow, Kerry and Jessica Seinfeld, Wednesday night during the Fashion Week pop-up.

Target has, somewhat infamously, never set up permanent pop-ups. Instead, the brand has positioned itself as a higher-end fashion and home decor like Proenza Schouler and Dree Harris. However, popular limited-edition lines, New Yorkers have had to wait for the Target boat that docked at Chelsea Piers for a pop-up boutique in October 2004. This time around, the retailer is launching simultaneous pop-ups taking on the heavily branded bodega.

Designer Richard Chai hits the bull's eye with a collection for Target that delivers his city-smart signatures at a fraction of the price.

from New Jersey and wait for me. One day a couple weeks into the class, the elevator opened on the wrong floor and I saw a live model posing with loud house music. Everyone in the studio was drawing frantically. I was like, "What is that class?" I found out it was fashion-model drawing and immediately switched. I knew then and there I wanted to be a designer. It was intoxicating."

TALENT SHOW "Before launching my own line in 2001, I was the director of design at Marc Jacobs. But my first internship was at Geoffrey Beene. Mr. Beene was one of the first and last great American couturiers. For him, it was about the integrity and craft of making clothes. That being my first experience, I thought that was how fashion is—and how it should be."

THE PRICE IS RIGHT "My friends are always telling me they love something from my signature collection but can't afford it. The amazing thing about working with Target is I'm able to take high fashion and bring it to the masses for, like, $29.99. I wanted the pieces to be youthful and lighthearted. I was inspired by New York in the eighties—Warhol, Basquiat, Madonna. I so wish I grew up in that time! There was this amazing undercurrent of creative energy and no rules. I tried to capture some of that rawness with this collection, whether it was the graffiti-rose print or the stripes that look like they've been spray-painted on. My own collection is much more serious, so it was fun to put on a different thinking cap!"

Right on Target

Between the high-low clothing and the cute toasters, it's nearly impossible to leave Target with only the paper towels you went in for. Now they've added three stylish beauty collections.

▲ PIXI BY PETRA Kits and multitasking products, $12 to $39, from makeup artist Petra Strand are enriched with skin-care ingredients like hyaluronic acid, aloe vera, and vitamin E. Above: the Neutralizing Coverup concealer palette.

NP SET Australian makeup artist Napdeon Perdis's new line, $12 to $36, has a skin-perfecting bent (there's bronzer, concealer, tinted moisturizer, and two types of foundation). Many of the lip and cheek colors can be applied with your fingers, and everything comes in sleek white compacts. Shown: Pasarella Powder Foundation.

▲ JW JEMMA KIDD The makeup artist's collection, $16 to $35, includes bold eye shadows and liners, a "complexion enhancer" (a.k.a. highlighter) that gives the skin model-like dewiness, and the Lip ID Colour Adapt Gloss (left), which goes on clear, then turns a flattering pink that lasts for hours.

PINK LADY

At her perfume launch, in a pink Pucci dress and fuchsia lipstick, Christina Aguilera asks me to pass her a pink pillow from a nearby couch (she just wants it by her, she explains). Her scent, Inspire, is—yep—pink. What inspired you for the fragrance? So many things. One is Tokyo at night. It's bright and colorful and beautiful the way it sort of pops. What scents were you drawn to growing up? I can't really tell you fragrances my mom wore; I just remember the bottles. So I'm adamant about the way the bottle looks—that classic feminine teardrop. The scent is very flowery. Tuberose was important because it's a comfort to me. Also musk to bring in that sexiness. Do women use fragrance mainly to smell sexy? Smelling good in general is why women turn to fragrance. For me, my sexuality is a big part of what I do. My fragrance had to have a bit of that sex appeal. —AMY NELSON LAMB

NP Set empowers women with an accessible collection that blends the hottest Hollywood and fashion trends into instant classics that represent a lighthearted attitude and knowing style.

The sophisticated and versatile collection sets women free from their boring beauty routine. Whether whimsy calls for flirty pink lips, or a sultry smokey eye, or a powder that lightens and brightens, NP Set creates on-the-go, breezy glamour with an abundant selection of color options and fix-it products. Streamlined and easy to use, the collection allows women to experiment with new looks confidently.

With packaging colors that reflect the sun, the sea, and the azure sky, NP Set not only transforms a look but can take it to daring heights worthy of a fashion shoot on the Champs-Élysées or a stroll down the beaches of Mykonos. Everything turns lighthearted, punchy and dramatic, and all becomes possible with just a swirl of instant natural glamour from Napoleon Perdis.
