ZixMail™ Wins Editors' Choice Award from PC Magazine

Leading high-tech industry publication says ZixMail "Tops the Pack"

DALLAS – January 2, 2001 – ZixIt Corporation (Nasdaq: ZIXI), premier provider of products and services that bring privacy and security to Internet communications, today announced that its flagship product, ZixMail™, has won PC Magazine's Editors' Choice award in the email security category.

ZixMail received the Editors' Choice recognition in connection with a feature article about Internet privacy and security. PC Magazine noted: "For secure email, ZixIt's ZixMail tops the pack. It lets you send encrypted messages to anyone (no matter what client the recipient uses)…." ZixIt received the award after PC Magazine concluded that ZixMail was superior to other email security providers and services.

"We are pleased that the technology experts at PC Magazine have selected ZixMail as the single best product for secure email," said David Cook, president and chief executive officer of ZixIt Corporation. "In addition to our standalone version of ZixMail, which works with any email platform, millions of Microsoft Outlook users can use ZixMail directly from within Outlook, and soon, we will complete a ZixMail version for Lotus Notes."

ZixIt's ZixMail and SecureDelivery™ secure-messaging services enable users to send encrypted and digitally signed email communications to any email address in the world. Pricing for the use of ZixIt's services is $18 per year for individuals and $2 per month for corporate users.

The PC Magazine Editors' Choice award for ZixMail in the January 16, 2001, issue comes shortly after the announcements of strategic agreements between ZixIt and Yahoo! Inc., Entrust
